CAMELIAS.

A few days ago we wrote to Mr V.De Bisschop the well known Camelia grower of Tronchiennes near Ghent (Belgium) to ask him some explanations about his remark « ready for treatment to make them bud. »

His reply contains information which we think will be of interest to others besides ourselves, so we give herewith a few extracts. Mr De Bisschop premises that his yearly stock of Camelias averages 10,000, so that he may claim to be a specialist in their culture.

He says that it is a common complaint from nurserymen in England and America, buying Camelias in bud in Autumn for immediate sale, that in consequence of the long journey, the plants suffer and throw off their buds when they should commence to expand, thus of course causing much dissatisfaction and grumbling. To remedy this he advises that plants should be bought in February and March, without flower buds, when they can be had at a considerably lower price than the budded stuff. These should be pruned over on arrival, cutting the young shoots back to within two leaves of the last year's growth. Then put the plants into a small well-ventilated house, or in suitable climate, under a lattice shelter, give a little feed when growth commences, and then when the buds appear to be about to form, that is when the end of the young shoot appears rounded over, stop all water.

(Mr De Bisschop will prune customers plants if desired before dispatch).

Camelias are excessively easy to force; they flower from December 1st to April 1st, and if the naturally early varieties are put in a temperate house towards beginning of December, most of them will be in flower by January 1st.

The most precocious varieties are Nobilissima, Chandleri Elegans, Alba plena, Herme, Imbricata, Doncklari, Mathotiana alba, Madame Lesbois, Princesse Bacchiochi, Angelo Cocchi, Marguerite Gouillon, etc.
